JAMES F. SHEA, 643 LA. AVE. N.W.

FOR SALE-TEN YEARS AGO SOME OF YOUR FOR SALE—TEN YEARS AGO SOME OF YOUR friends purchased real estate in the District of Columbia for which they are unable to get what they paid. Three years ago other friends purchased real estate in the District, and can today realize double what they paid. It was simply a case of the wrong and right locations. The same thing is going on today. The well-written advertisement attracts you, and before you realize what you are doing your money is wasted in some poor investment. If you wish to double your money in the next 24 months buy where the wealth and best improvements are going. We beg to call your attention to toward which the best part of Washington is rapidly growing. This is not what we alone say Every one says it. This property is just 6 blocks rapidly growing. This is not what we alone say. Every one says it. This property is just 6 blocks beyond the solidly built up section of the city and 5 blocks beyond the new Conn. ave. bridge. Now 50 cents sq. ft.; will bring double the price in less than 24 months. Terms arranged to sult. Drop postal for particulars.

THE HEARST TICKET. List Which Will Have to Be Nominated by Petition.

NEW YORK, October 15 .- The ticket of the municipal ownership league for county and borough officers in New York was announced at the Hoarst headquarters last night after the executive committee of the league and the committee appointed by the convention for the purpose had discussed the candidates nearly all day. This is the ticket, which will have to be nominated by petition: Justice of the supreme court, Samuel Seabury; judge of the court of general sessions, John Palmiere; district attorney, Clarence J. Shearn; sheriff, Joseph W. Cody; county clerk, J. Fair-fax McLaughlin; registrar, Michael Brayer; president of Manhattan, Thomas Gilleran; coroners, Max Stern, Dr. Alfred H. Riedel,

THE WHITE COMPANY

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

"Ah, you start," said she, with the same sidelong look of mischief, "and I cannot marvel at it. Didst not look to see the distressed damozel again. Oh, that I were a minstrel, that I might put it into rhyme with the whole romance—the luckless maid, the wicked socman and the virtuous clerk! So might our fame have gone down together for all time, and you be numbered with Sir Percival or Sir Galahad, or all the other rescuers of oppressed ladies."

"What I did," said Alleyne, "was too small a thing for thanks; and yet, if I may say it without offense, it was too grave and near a matter for mirth and raillery. I had counted on my brother's love, but God has willed that it should be otherwise. It is a joy to me to see you again, lady, and to know that you have reached home in safety, if this be indeed your home." "Yes, in sooth, Castle Twynham is my home, and Sir Nigel Loring my father. 1 should have told you so this morning, but you said that you were coming thither, so I bethought me that I might hold it back as a surprise to you. Oh, dear! but it was brave to see you!" she cried, bursting out a-laughing once more, and standing with her hand pressed to her side, and her halfclosed eyes twinkling with amusement. You drew back and came forward with your eyes upon my book there, like the mouse who sniffs the cheese and yet dreads should have touched it." "Nay, it warmed my very heart to see it. So glad was I that I laughed for very pleasure. My fine preacher can himself be tempted then, thought I; he is not made of nother clay to the rest of us." "God help me! I am the weakest of the haste. Rest upon it for the night, and let weak!" groaned Alleyne. "I pray that I may have more strength." "And to what end?" she asked, sharply.

"If you are, as I understand, to shut your-self forever in your cell within the four walls of an abbey, then of what use would it be were your praper to be answered." "The use of my own salvation." She turned from him with a pretty shrug and wave. "Is that all?" she said. "Then you are no better than Father Christopher and the rest of them. Your own, your own, ever your own! My father is the king's man, and when he rides into the press of fight he is not thinking ever of the saving of his own poor body; he recks little enough if he leave it on the field. Why, then, should you, who are soldiers of the spirit, be ever moping and hiding in ceil or in cave, with minds full of your own concerns, while the world, which you should be mending, going on its way, and neither sees nor hears you? Were ye all as thoughtless of your own souls as the soldier is of his body. ye would be of more avail to the souls of others."

"There is sooth in what you say, lady," Alleyne answered; "and yet I scarce can see what you would have the clergy and the church to do." "I would have them live as others, and do men's work in the world, preaching by their lives rather than by their words. 1 would have them come forth from their lonely places, mix with the bored folks, feel the pains and the pleasures, the cares and the rewards, the temptings and the stirrings of the common people. Let them toil, and swinken, and labor, and plow the land, and take wives to themselves-"Alas! alas!" cried Alleyne, aghast, "you have surely sucked this poison from the man Wicliffe, of whom I have heard such evil things."

"Nay, I know him not. I have learned it by looking from my own chamber window and marking these poor monks of the priory their weary ! have asked myself if the best which can be done with virtue is to shut it within high walls as though it were some savage creature. If the good will lock themselves up, and if the wicked will still wander free, then alas for the world!" Alleyne looked at her in astonishment, for her cheek was flushed, her eyes gleaming, and her whole pose full of eloquence and conviction. Yet in an instant she had changed again to her old expression of merriment leavened with mischief.

"Wilt do what I ask?" said she. 'What is it, lady?" "Oh, most ungallant clerk! A true knight would never have asked, but would have vowed upon the instant. 'Tis but to bear me out in what I say to my father." "In saying, if he ask, that it was south of the Christchurch road that I met you. I shall be shut up with the tire-women else, and have a week of spindle and bodkin, when I would fain be galloping Troubadour up Wilverly Walk, or loosing little Roland at the Vinney Ridge herons."

"I shall not answer him if he ask."
"Not answer! But he will have an answer. Nay, but you must not fail me, or it will go ill with me."
"But, lady," cried poor Alleyne, in great distress, "how can I say that it was to the south of the road when I know well that it was four miles to the north?"

"You will not say it?" "Surely you will not, too, when you know that it is not so?" "Oh, I weary of your preaching!" she cried, and swept away with a toss of her beautiful head, leaving Alleyne as cast down and ashamed as though he had him-self proposed some infamous thing. She was back again in an instant, however, in

"Look at that, my friend!" said she, "If you had been shut up in abbey or in cell this day you could not have taught a wayward maiden to abide by the truth. Is it not so? What avail is the shepherd if he leave his sheep?"

"A sorry shepherd!" said Alleyne, hum-bly. "But here is your noble father." bly. "But here is your noble father."
"And you shall see how worthy a pupil I am. Father, I am much beholden to this young clerk, who was of service to me, and helped me this very morning in Minstead woods, four miles to the north of the Christchurch road, where I had no call to be, you having ordered it otherwise."

All this she reeled off in a loud voice, and then glanced with sidelong, questioning eyes at Alleyne for his approval. Sir Nigel, who had entered the room with a silvery-haired old lady upon his arm, stared aghast at this sudden outburst of candor.

"Maude! Maude!" said he, shaking his "Maude! Maude!" said he, shaking his head, "it is more hard for me to gain obedience from you than from the tenscore drunken archers who followed me to Guienne. Yet, hush! little one, for your fair lady-mother will be here anon, and there is no need that she should know it. We will keep you from the provost marshal this journey. Away to your chamber west. journey. Away to your chamber, sweeting, and keep a blithe face, for she who confesses is shriven. And now, fair mother," he continued, when his daughter had gone, "sit you here by the fire, for your blood runs colder than it did. Alleyne Edricson, I would have a word with you, for I would fain that you should take service under me. And here in good time comes my lady, with-out whose counsel it is not my wont to de-cide aught of import; but, indeed, it was her own thought that you should come."
"For I have formed a good opinion of you and can see that you are one who may be trusted," said the Lady Loring. "And in good sooth, my dear lord hath need of such a one by his side, for he recks so little of a one by his side, for he recks so little of himself that there should be one there to look to his needs and meet his wants. You have seen the cloisters; it were well that you should see the world, too, ere you make choice for life between them."

"It was for that very reason that my father willed that I should come forth into the world at my twentieth year," said Allevne. eyne. "Then your father was a man of good counsel," said she, "and you cannot carry out his will better than by going on his path, where all that is noble and gallant in England will be your companions."

"You can ride?" asked Sir Nigel, looking at the youth with puckered eyes.
"Yes; I have ridden much at the abbey."

amiss for a monk-bred man. I trust that you are lowly and serviceable?"
"I have served all my life, my lord."
"Canst carve, too?"
"I have carved two days a week for the brethren."

brethren."

"A model, truly! Wilt make a squire of squires. But tell me, I pray, canst curl hair?" "No, my lord; but I could learn."

"No, my lord; but I could learn."
"It is of import," said he, "for I love to keep my hair well ordered, seeing that the weight of my helmet for thirty years hath in some degree frayed it upon the top." He pulled off his velvet cap of maintenance as he spoke and displayed a pate which was as baid as an egg and shone bravely in the fire-light. "You see" said he whisking round." ing and curling, for I doubt not that if you look siantwise at my head, when the light is good, you will yourself perceive that there are places where the hair is sparse."

"It is for you also to bear the purse," said the lady, "for my sweet lord is of so free and gracious a temper that he would give it gayly to the first who asked alms of him. All these things, with some knowledge of venerie and of the management of horse, hawk and hound, with the grace, and hardihood, and courtesy which are proper to your age, will make you a fit squire for Sir Nigel Loring."

"Alas! lady," Alleyne answered, "I know well the great honor that you have done me in deeming me worthy to wait upon so renowned a knight, yet I am so conscious of my own weakness that I scarce dare incur duties which I might be so ill-fitted to fulfill." "Modesty and an humble mind," said she. "are the very first and rarest gifts in page or squire. Your words prove that you have these, and all the rest is but the work of use and time. But there is no call for your orisons ask for guidance in the mat-We knew your father well, and would fain help his son, though we have small cause to love your brother, the who is forever stirring up strife in the county' "We can scarce hope," said Nigel, "to have all ready for our start before the feast of St. Luke, for there is much to be done in the time. You will have leisure, therefore, if it please you to take service under me, in which to learn your devoir. Bertrand, my daughter's page, is hot to go;

but in sooth he is over-young for such rough work as may be before us." "And I have one favor to crave from you," added the lady of the castle, as Alleyne turned to leave their presence. "You have, as I understand, much learning which you have acquired at Beaulieu?"
"Little enough, lady, compared with those who were my teachers."
"Yet enough for my purpose, I doubt not. For I would have you give an hour or two a day while you are with us in dis-coursing with my daughter, the Lady Maude; for she is somewhat backward, I fear, and hath no love for letters, save for these poor fond romances, which do but fill her empty head with dreams of enchanted maidens and of errant cavallers. Father Christopher comes over after nones from the priory, but he is stricken with years and slow of speech, so that she gets small profit from his teaching. I would have you do what you can with her, and with Agatha, my young tire-woman, and with Dorothy Pierpoint."

And so Alleyne found himself not only chosen as squire to a knight, but also as squire to three damosels, which was even further from the part which he had thought to play in the world. Yet he could but agree to do what he might, and so went forth from the castle hall with his face flushed and his head in a whirl at the thought of the strange and perilous paths which his feet were destined to tread.

(To be continued tomorro THE NEW YORK MAYORALTY.

Tammany's Estimate of the Vote Gives McClellan 302,500. The following is Tammany's estimate of the vote in the forthcoming municipal election: Estimated registration, 625,000; estimated vote, 550,000; McClellan, fifty-five per cent, 302,500; Ivins, thirty per cent, 165,000; Hearst, fifteen per cent, 82,500;

McClellan's majority, 55,000. According to the calculation of a Tammany political expert and given to Mayor McClellan, the foregoing shows how the vote at the coming election will be divided among the three candidates for mayor. This estimate was made at the request of the managers of the democratic campaign, and they are satisfied that it is about as They feel that Mayor McClellan will be re-elected with ease, but they realize and admit that the Hearst campaign will be considerably more formidable than they had believed. There are among the Tammany leaders some who think that the Hearst ticket will run neck and neck with the republican ticket, and occasionally one is found who thinks Mr. Hearst's vote will exceed Mr. Ivins'. Compared with the figures of other elections when three tickets were in the field. Tammany's forecast is not reliable. Since and including the election of 1886 there have been three campaigns having three active and enthusiastic participants. In each one the combined vote of the other two tickets would have been sufficient to defeat the victorious candidate.

In 1886 the nominees were Abram S. Hew-itt, democrat; Theodore Roosevelt, republican, and Henry George, independent. The republicans made a strong fight and the George followers, although having little money, waged a vigorous cart tall cam-paign. Mr. Hewitt polled 90,552 votes, or about forty-one per cent of the total; Mr. Roosevelt polled 60,435 votes, and Mr. George had 68,111 to his credit. The vote of Mr. Hewitt was away below the esti-mates that had been made, and the vote for Mr. George exceeded considerably the estimate of his political opponents.

TRIBUTE TO IRVING.

Royalty Sent Message to Actor's Family-Roosevelt Regrets.

King Edward and Queen Alexandra, through Gen. Sir Dighton Macnaghten Probyn, keeper of the privy purse and extra equerry to the king, sent a message of sympathy to the family of Sir Henry Irving, in which their majesties say: "He will, indeed, be a great loss to the profession of which he was such a distinguished member."

Messages of sympathy have also been re-ceived from President Roosevelt and Direc-tor Jules Claretie on behalf of the Comedie Francaise. President Roosevelt cabled that he greatly regrets the sad news of Sir Henry's death.
That the body of Sir Henry Irving should find a resting place in Westminster Abbey appears to be a very general desire.

A jury in the case of the United States against Willard N. Jones, formerly state representative; Thaddeus Potter, an attorney, and Ira Wade, a timber locator, reney, and Ira Wade, a timber locator, returned a verdiet at Portland Sunday finding Jones and Potter guilty of conspiracy to defraud the United States of a part of its public domain. Wade was acquitted. The charge against the defendants was that they secured persons to locate on lands in the Siletz Indian reservation in western Oregon and to swear falsely that they had occupied the land, when as a matter of fact the land was secured for the benefit of the defendants.
